Dictation

Dictation is one of the most effective ways to teach children to write. Sentences for dictation are provided below. This needs to be systematically taught in the following way.

Progression of teaching the skill of writing through dictation

- Initially only dictate letter sounds that have been taught e.g. “I want you to write the letter sound /b/.” After the children have written it down, form it correctly on the board. The children may like to put a tick by their letter if they have written it correctly. Then go on to calling out the next sound. It provides the children with the necessary practice, as well as enabling the teacher to see who still does not know how to write the letters.

- When most of the children can hear the sounds in words e.g. dog is made up of a d-o-g, start dictating simple, regular words. Examples can be found in the ‘Homework Writing Sheets’ section in The Phonics Handbook, or in the Jolly Phonics Word Book. Many parents like to help their children, and these children can be given dictation homework, so long as they are able to hear the sounds in words and can write the letters.

- Teach the children to read and spell the first ten ‘tricky words’.

- Now the children are ready to start writing sentences that contain those ten ‘tricky words’ and regular words that can be written by listening for the sounds in the words e.g. I sat on the bench. (by this time the children should have been taught the 42 letter sounds. Only these are used in the following sentences).

- These dictation sentences are split into groups of three sentences. If you are giving homework to a child, cut a group of three sentences off the sheet and put it into an exercise book, with wide lines if available, and ask the parents to call the sentences out. They should not let their child see the sentences and copy them. It is a good idea to encourage the parents to leave the mistakes so you can see where there might be problems.

- Sentences using the next tricky words follow on from the first group, once tricky words 11-20 have been taught.
